

LEFT BRIDE
AFTER A DAYDickinson Met His Wife
at a Fort Hamilton
Dance.Proposed and Wedding Party
Was Made Up the Same Night—Wants Separation.

After one day of wedded bliss young Guy Dickinson, heir to $100,000 of the estate of his father, the late John Dickinson, diamond merchant, has deserted his bride. The marriage has just been made public and with it comes the announcement that Dickinson's bride, Brooklyn, will endeavor to have the marriage annulled on the ground that he was not of age.

Dickinson was within one week of twenty-one years old when he went to the Dewey House at One Hundred and First street and Fourth avenue for an evening's entertainment. There were many private soldiers and no non-commissioned officers from Fort Hamilton present and the fun was at its height.

Mrs. Barbara Baker, who says she is nineteen years old, was one of the dancers. She was the guest of the party and the ardent young heart of Dickinson beat fast at the sight of her. He made open and unconventional love to her until some one suggested that he marry the girl.

Mr. Dickinson's answer is said to have been, "In a minute."

A wedding party was formed, consisting of the bride and bridegroom-to-be, a Miss Eva Myers and Patrick J. Holmes, private in the Fifth Avenue.

The party included the Rev. J. L. Whitehouse, of the Fourth Avenue Baptist Church, to perform the ceremony, and afterward returned to the dance hall, where they remained until late hour. Mrs. Dickinson, it is said, became unusually gay and at the height of her joy abandoned her marriage certificate on the floor and danced a skirt dance on it. That night the bride and bridegroom went to the home of the bride's mother and the next day young Dickinson went home. He has not been back since.

Mr. Dickinson is not good looking. She lives with her parents at 178 Thirty-first street. Brooklyn, a shabby little one and a half-story house. Her father is a bookster. Her mother is a nurse.

An Evening World reporter visiting the house to-day, listened to both mother and daughter as follows:

"Barbara is Mrs. Dickinson, all right!" said the bride-cut in with:

"I don't care how rich he is. His folks say he is rich, but he can't get out of it. She married him for the first time the night she married him," resumed the mother. "He had been going with her for six months before he married her."

"Shut your face! I'll do the talking," said the bride, and Guy Dickinson's mother-in-law, who was sitting at the table, while she explained:

"He's been coming here and wanting me to marry him a long time. I told him I wouldn't. The day he was out in the country with his folks he sent me a telegram saying he wanted to marry me at 5 o'clock. He asked me that time to marry him before my whole family. I didn't want to marry him, but he said there'd be trouble like this. But he kept at me so long that at last I said yes. Then we went over to the minister's and got married. After we got married we went around to the Dewey."

"That's a lie, that story they tell of me throwing up my marriage certificate on the floor and dancing on it. I have lost the certificate, but I did not dance on it nor throw it away."

The Dickinson family resides in a fine mansion at Ninety-second street and the Shore Road, Fort Hamilton. His mother-in-law is now traveling in Norway. He said nothing to his sister and brothers and they knew nothing of the affair until yesterday.

O'NEILL'S OPENING.
Millinery, Suits and Cloaks for Autumn Wear that Will Delight the Feminine Fancy.

The feminine mind is intent on millinery, suits and cloaks these cool autumnal days, and merchants are striving after the most charming things for attiring the wives and daughters of New York.

At O'Neill's, Sixth avenue, Twentieth to Twenty-first street, the Fall opening in these departments is marked by the more than usual beauty and elegance of the display and the variety from which to choose.

In the millinery department there are especially pretty creations for Miss or Madam's head. A toque made of narrow strips of castor-colored felt tucked in with chiffon, is trimmed with a knot of turquoise blue panne velvet in the face and seven or eight small braids in shades of blue, white, castor and brown.

Another toque is of tan-colored silk with ruffles on wire zigzagged all over the crown. The front is of sable fur, with the little felt showing over one side and the tail also on the side, and a wide quilted droop over at the side also.

A large, daring hat is made of wine-colored velvet turned around and around like a wheel in folds, and the crown is a knot on top; velvet brought over the face and finished with a large gilt and steel ornament; the entire facing is a breast of impenetrable shades of wine color and green.

To wear with a tailor-made gown there is a stiff English walking hat of reseda-green felt, draped over the frame, turned with black velvet, with wings and a Tuscan gold ornament in the face. In suits there is one style composed of a Russian blouse with Vandyke bands of silk, high rolling collar, bishop sleeves, gilt facings, and to be worn open or closed. With this a severe skirt, strap seams and Vandyke braids of silk. The suit is to be had in varied colors.

A rare-fur-trimmed skirt with four narrow bands of satin goes with a Russian blouse with bands of satin put on in points; vest front of the same material, rolling collar and revers of satin.

A suit of broadcloth is made in different colors, light-fitting, with, with vest front; trimmed with gold lure and gold trimmings. The skirt is flounced and trimmed with black braid put on in waves.

Coats for women are all in the short styles, except a new automobile coat, three-fourths length, and a little lighter fitting to the waist, in pretty tan and blacks; some with mink collars.

A short and jaunty black jersey jacket, double-breasted, is trimmed with astrachan.

A handsome pebble cheviot, with sable collar, is in front effect, and another pebble cheviot is double-breasted and lined with taffeta, short, like the other, and chic.

Fall Clothing.

More style, more quality, more all-around excellence per dollar of cost than anywhere else on this continent.

We could preach a sermon four yards long, and perhaps would still fail to convince you.

But there is one argument that never fails to convince—the silent eloquence of the clothing itself.

Come in and see—to see these means to buy, and to buy clothing here—means to come back for more, season after season and year after year.

EDUCATIONAL PRIZE CONTEST

To-morrow will be the day for members of 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 B Classes TO ENTER THE

Educational Prize Contest.

Last Saturday 10,000 children (members of the A Classes) entered the contest, and in order that things may move along without a hitch, it is important that children should know the name of the class they belong in.

Ask your teacher—find out if yours is an A or B Class, and if a B Class, come here to-morrow and enter the great contest.

It's all free!—not a penny to pay for anything!

DIRECTIONS GOVERNING THE PRIZE CONTEST.

The answers to the Prize Questions are to be written on the blanks supplied in each booklet, detached from same and returned by MAIL ONLY to the office of the Educational Prize Contest, at Siegel-Cooper Co.'s Store, New York, not later than the Wednesday immediately following the date of issue.

Each set of answers mailed in accordance with the above instructions will be carefully examined, and the awards made by a committee composed of teachers from the New York Public Schools. Contestants entitled to prize and honorable mention will be duly notified of their success, and their names will be published in the daily newspapers.

The booklets cover the course of study prescribed by the Board of Education for use in the highest ten grades of the Public Schools of Greater New York. The series has been carefully designed to assist the children in their efforts to make a fine record at school, and by offering practical suggestions, to guide the pupils along right lines and into proper methods of study, saving them much time and effort in the preparation of their lessons.

Test questions, systematically graded in order to keep in constant touch with the advancing term, will appear at regular intervals, enabling the parents interested to gauge at a glance the educational progress of their children, but because their solution will be extremely helpful to the scholars, and in order to encourage them to undertake the necessary work, the Siegel-Cooper Company will each week award a number of valuable prizes to the children handling in the best answers.

The booklets cover the work done in all grammar school classes and in those of the highest two primary grades. They will be issued at intervals of two weeks and distributed gratis to all children who apply for them in person on Saturdays at the Siegel-Cooper Store.

That all may have an equal chance, competitors are advised to enter the contest at the outset. Those prevented from doing so are welcome to join at any time in the course, and from the moment of entry will receive as fair a chance of obtaining Prizes as the rest.

It is with keen gratification that Siegel-Cooper Company presents this series of Booklets comprising the Educational Prize Contest to the public school children of Greater New York, confident that it can confer upon them no greater or more lasting benefit.

All you have to do is to call for the booklet covering the class you are a member of; read it, study it, answer the questions and mail them as above explained.

If your work deserves it you'll get one of the 80 prizes to be awarded for this week's work!

The distribution takes place on the Balcony, Main Floor. On Saturday, Sept. 29, Contest No. 3 will open for entry to members of 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 A Classes. The prize winners of Contest No. 1 will be announced Friday, Sept. 28, and of Contest No. 2 one week later.
